Cigar Humidor Pro

200 to 1400 cigars

Enjoying a cigar is not considered smoking in the traditional sense - it is mainly seen as part of a gastronomic experience.

Cigars are perishable and should be stored in a humidor, a drawer or cabinet with a built-in humidifier to keep the humidity at a constant level.

Storing cigars

Humidity and temperature are the most important factors when it comes to storing and aging cigars.

If the cigars are stored too dry, they crack. Keep them too warm and humid, and they become moldy.

Cigars - Temperature and humidity

Like wine, cigars are best kept at a stable temperature. However, the temperature must be higher than when storing wine, as cigars are best kept at around 20-22°C.

Even more important is the level of humidity. Cigars come from tropical climates, where the tobacco is naturally kept smooth and healthy. The optimum humidity level for storage of cigars is around 70%.

A classic and easy to remember rule of thumb is the 70-70 formula for cigars, since they are kept fine at 70% humidity and 70 degrees Fahrenheit.

At least in countries still using the imperial system for temperatures it makes easily sense, but 70°F is 21,11°C.

Storage of cigars

Like certain wines, cigars can develop during long-term storage. Certain cigars will benefit from being stored up to 10 years as the aromatic flavors will change along the way.

Most fresh cigars are significantly improved by storage for at least two or three months.

Young and new cigars have freshness and green notes while cigars with age develop rounded and deeper dark notes.
